Kettle's Yard is delighted to announce Artists for Kettle's Yard, an exhibition reflecting the gallery's longstanding reputation for championing the work of leading modern and contemporary artists. From paintings and sculpture to ceramics, photography and prints, the exhibition will include over 75 works by artists including Antony Gormley, Lubaina Himid, Chantal Joffe, Issam Kourbaj, Jennifer Lee, Ben Nicholson, Lucie Rie, Megan Rooney, Edmund de Waal, Caroline Walker and Ai Weiwei, among many more. The works have been generously donated by the artists as well as by galleries, collectors and artist estates. They will be sold in support of the Jim and Helen Ede Fund Endowment Campaign, established in honour of the Cambridge gallery's founders and in anticipation of its 70th anniversary in 2027.

Jim and Helen Ede opened their home for the first time to visitors in December 1957. Through their friendships with and support for artists, they amassed a remarkable collection. Today, the gallery is home to acclaimed exhibitions, concerts and learning and community programmes for all ages.

Kettle's Yard hopes to raise over £750,000 to support the Jim & Helen Ede Fund, which will ensure that the unique house and collection are conserved, and new art and music are commissioned each year, for generations to come.

Participating artists in the display have strong connections to the gallery, marked by early career exhibitions, major retrospectives and new commissions. Each artist will generously donate artworks to be sold at Kettle's Yard and online; select works will also be auctioned in a Sotheby's modern and contemporary sale in June 2026.

Artists for Kettle's Yard will feature new and never-before-seen works, including Linder's photomontage of Jim Ede, which complements her 2020 portrait of Helen Ede, as well as a new series of ceramic sake cups by Jennifer Lee, a selection of watercolours by Callum Innes, and a painting by Caroline Walker made specifically for the exhibition. Nearby, Edmund de Waal's Tristia, I (2025) – comprising five porcelain vessels and four silver tiles in a vitrine – will be shown with a delicately detailed flower painting by Alison Watt, a precursor to a new work that will be shown in the gallery's major spring exhibition, Handpicked: Painting Flowers from 1900 to Today (25 April – 6 September 2026).

Wider highlights from the exhibition will include Rana Begum's multicolour No.1337 Mesh (2023), a selection of Anni Albers' vibrant abstract screenprints from the 1980s, and a Celia Paul painting detailing her view from the train en route to Cambridge. Ben Nicholson's drypoint print of Pisa will also be shown with Lucie Rie's Bottle with Flared Rim (1970s), and Antony Gormley's cast iron Small Still II (2025), reflecting the artist's longstanding relationship with Kettle's Yard. Gormley's 2018 solo exhibition remains the most visited in the gallery's history.

Artists for Kettle's Yard will be accompanied by a fully illustrated catalogue. It marks the second exhibition under the 'Artists for Kettle's Yard' title, the first taking place in 2011 in support of the gallery's major redevelopment, which opened in 2018 with state-of-the-art galleries and a new education wing.

About The Jim and Helen Ede Fund Endowment Campaign

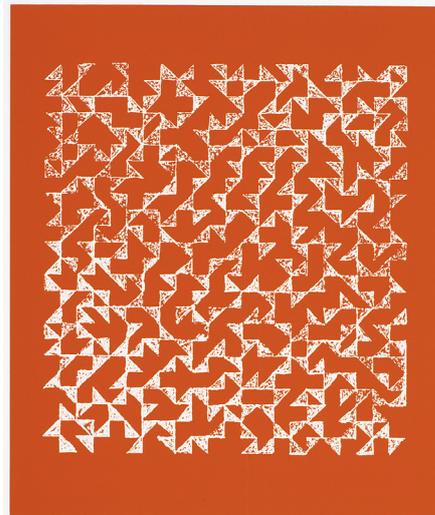

The Jim and Helen Ede Fund Endowment Campaign is a five-year campaign to increase the gallery's endowment by £5 million. This allows Kettle's Yard to endow the post of Senior Curator for the House & Collection, commission artists to make new work each year and strengthen its engagement with local communities, as well as with schools, children and young people. Named after the pioneering founders of Kettle's Yard, the Fund aims to continue their legacy of inspiring young people to look at art and be creative throughout their lives.
